A Fall Happens Right Under Your Feet

By: Erin Ulibarri, MPH

One fall can drastically change a person's life. Even though falls happen to 1 in 3 older adults each year, they are not inevitable or a natural part of the aging process. There are many things a person can do to remain active, independent, and fall-free.

September 20-27, 2009 is Fall Prevention Awareness Week. The Down with Falls Coalition, a collaboration of health professionals, government agencies, and community organizations, will be out in the community during the week presenting fall prevention information at various locations.

Common reasons for falling include: 1) having problems walking or moving around; 2) taking four or more medications; 3) having foot problems and wearing unsafe footwear; 4) muscle weakness; and 5) tripping hazards in and around your home.

Environment modification, which includes both changes to indoor environments, such as the home, and outdoor environment is a fall prevention strategy. How "walkable" is your neighborhood? When walking outside, take these precautions to lower your chances of having a fall:

- Walk with a friend so you can both look for trip hazards
- Watch for sidewalk cracks, tree roots, holes, and elevation changes
- Be aware that trees drop leaves, seed pods, blossoms, and other debris
- Slow down when carrying bulky items
- Hold the hand rails when using stairs
- Be cautious in parking lots and watch for curbs and concrete wheel chocks/ parking stops
- Watch for traffic and use curb cuts and respite islands when crossing the street
